

Double Funnel Bridge

AI Overview

A Double Funnel Bridge combines a bridge funnel with a dual-funnel strategy, guiding prospects from initial engagement to purchase while running parallel marketing motions for maximum conversion.

What is a Bridge Funnel? A bridge funnel is a marketing strategy that acts as an intermediary between your traffic source (ads, social media, or content) and the final product or offer. It typically consists of two pages: the first captures the visitor's email or interest through a free offer, and the second introduces a paid product or service, building trust and pre-framing the purchase decision. This approach warms up cold traffic, increases engagement, and improves conversion rates by providing a smooth transition from initial interest to purchase.

What is a Double Funnel? A double funnel is a B2B marketing strategy where two parallel funnels operate simultaneously: one focused on demand generation (MQLs) and the other on account-based marketing (MQAs). Both funnels feed into the same revenue pipeline, reinforcing each other rather than competing. This approach is particularly effective for companies with longer sales cycles and sufficient resources to manage both motions. Accurate contact data is critical, as high email bounce rates can undermine the effectiveness of the strategy.

How the Double Funnel Bridge Works The Double Funnel Bridge concept merges these two strategies:

- Bridge Funnel Component: Captures leads and nurtures them through a pre-sale page, building trust and providing value before presenting the main offer.
- Double Funnel Component: Runs two parallel marketing motions—demand generation and account-based marketing—feeding the same pipeline. This ensures that both individual leads and target accounts are engaged simultaneously, increasing the likelihood of conversion.

By combining these approaches, businesses can maximize lead quality and conversion rates. The bridge funnel warms up prospects, while the double funnel ensures that both broad and targeted marketing...
