

Eye graph calibration in Egypt

AI Overview

Eye graph calibration in Egypt can be performed at EGAC-accredited biomedical and calibration laboratories that ensure traceability to international standards. Accredited Calibration Services In Egypt, calibration of medical and ophthalmic equipment, including eye charts and visual acuity devices, is typically handled by ISO/IEC 17025-accredited laboratories. These labs provide traceable calibration to national and international standards, ensuring accurate and reliable measurements for clinical and research purposes. The Egyptian Accreditation Council (EGAC) oversees accreditation, guaranteeing that laboratories meet rigorous technical and quality requirements. Leading Providers Al-Geel Trading Co. - Established in 1995, Al-Geel Trading operates an ISO 17025-accredited biomedical calibration lab. They specialize in medical and training equipment, offering calibration services for ophthalmic devices and other biomedical instruments across Egypt. Egyptian Engineering & Scientific Services (EESS) - EESS provides EGAC-accredited calibration for a wide range of instruments, including biomedical and measurement devices. Their services include on-site and in-lab calibration, with certificates that include as-found and as-left data, ensuring compliance with ISO 17025 standards. GOST Egypt - Offers measurement calibration services across major industrial and medical centers in Cairo, Alexandria, Giza, and Suez. They provide traceable calibration to SI units, which is essential for precision in ophthalmic testing equipment. How Calibration Works Calibration involves comparing the output of an instrument against a known reference standard and adjusting it if necessary. For eye charts or visual acuity devices, this ensures that the displayed optotypes, luminance, and contrast levels meet the required specifications. Accredited labs provide a calibration certificate documenting the measurement uncertainty and traceability, which is critical for clinical compliance and quality assurance.
