

Price list for optical fiber communication equipment

AI Overview

Optical fiber communication equipment prices vary widely, from $0.10-$1 per meter for fiber cables to hundreds or thousands of dollars for transceivers, media converters, and networking devices.

Fiber Cable Costs The cost of optical fiber itself depends on type and quality. Single-mode fiber (G652D), commonly used for long-distance telecom applications, typically ranges from $0.10 to $1 per meter, depending on specifications, attenuation rate, and compliance with standards like ISO/IEC 11801 and ITU-T G.652. Multi-mode fiber for shorter distances in data centers is generally less expensive. Prices can fluctuate due to raw material costs, manufacturing automation, and supply chain factors.

Equipment and Accessories Optical fiber communication equipment includes media converters, transceivers (SFP+, XFP, GBIC), Ethernet extenders, and TDM/video converters. Prices vary by functionality, brand, and performance:

- Fiber optic transceivers: $50-$500 each, depending on speed (1G, 10G, 25G, 100G) and distance support.
- Media converters: $50-$300, supporting single-mode or multi-mode fiber over distances up to 15 km.
- High-density pre-terminated fiber systems: Can cost several hundred to thousands of dollars per rack unit, offering faster installation and reduced signal loss.
- Wholesale or factory-priced equipment: Purchasing directly from manufacturers or distributors can reduce costs significantly, especially for bulk orders or OEM solutions.

Factors Affecting Price

- Fiber type: Single-mode vs. multi-mode, low-loss or multi-core designs.
- Distance and bandwidth requirements: Long-haul networks require higher-quality fiber and advanced transceivers.
- Network technology: Equipment supporting 4G/5G, WDM, or high-speed data centers is more expensive.
- Compliance and standards: ISO, ITU, and RoHS compliance can increase cost but ensures reliability
