

Price of Small Power Distribution Box

AI Overview

Small portable power distribution boxes typically range from $150 to $600, depending on amperage, outlets, and features. Price Range and Factors Entry-level units with basic features, such as 20–30 amps and a few outlets, generally cost $150–$250. These are suitable for light-duty applications or temporary indoor use (Amazon, Lex Products). Mid-range boxes with higher amperage (50–100 amps), multiple circuit breakers, and weather-resistant enclosures typically range from $300–$500. These are designed for outdoor events, construction sites, or industrial use and often include adjustable current ratings and UL certification. High-end or specialized units, such as 100–200 amp PowerHOUSE™ boxes with multiple duplex receptacles, rugged steel enclosures, and compatibility with generators, can cost $500–$600 or more. These are ideal for professional AV setups, stage events, or emergency power distribution. Additional Considerations Amperage and number of outlets: Higher amperage and more outlets increase the price. Environmental rating: Outdoor-rated boxes (NEMA 3R or rainproof) are more expensive than indoor-rated units. Brand and certification: Reputable brands like Lex Products or Blizzard Lighting often cost more but provide durability, safety, and UL/cULus certification. Portability features: Compact, lightweight, or sled-based designs may slightly increase cost due to convenience and rugged construction. For the most accurate pricing, it is recommended to check supplier websites like Amazon, Grainger, Lex Products, ISC Sales, or Full Compass, as prices can fluctuate based on stock, shipping, and specific model features.
