

Price of a covered bridge

AI Overview

The cost of building a covered bridge typically ranges from $70,000 for small pedestrian spans to over $1 million for larger vehicular bridges, depending on size, materials, and site conditions.

Cost Ranges

Small pedestrian bridges (20–40 ft span): Materials and labor for a simple timber or concrete deck bridge can cost $70,000–$120,000, with per-foot costs around $3,500–$6,000.

Mid-sized residential or light vehicular bridges (60 ft span): Using steel girders and reinforced concrete decks, total costs range from $310,000–$520,000, with per-foot costs of $5,000–$8,700.

Large roadway bridges (100–150 ft span): With deep foundations, seismic design, and high-performance coatings, costs can reach $1,000,000–$1,900,000, or $8,300–$15,800 per foot.

Factors Affecting Cost

Span Length and Load Requirements: Longer spans and heavier load capacities increase material and labor costs.

Materials: Timber is generally cheaper upfront but requires more maintenance, while steel and concrete offer durability at higher initial costs.

Foundation and Site Conditions: Bridges over rivers or uneven terrain may require deep foundations, piling, or excavation, adding significantly to the budget.

Design and Permitting: Engineering, permits, and inspections can add tens of thousands of dollars, especially for custom or decorative designs.

Labor and Equipment: Crane rentals, formwork, and specialized crews contribute to total costs. Remote or difficult-to-access sites can further increase expenses.

Aesthetic Features: Covered bridges often include decorative railings or roof structures, which can raise costs compared to simple open bridges.

Cost-Saving Strategies

Use modular or prefabricated components to reduce on-site labor. Opt for standard designs rather than custom curves or complex geometries. Schedule construction during off-peak seasons to lower labor and equipment costs. Engage early with permitting authorities to avoid delays and additional fees.
